

Forced Labour under the Nazi Regime - Information Hub www.zwangsarbeit.eu

The Information Hub on forced labour under the National Socialist regime in Germany is part of the website of the German Federal Archives (Bundesarchiv). Among other things, visitors to the Information Hub can search a list of archives where relevant documents are available relating to forced labour in Germany and German-occupied territories. In addition to information on the deployment of civilian workers, the Information Hub offers a vast range of texts on forced labour in concentration camps and ghettos, as well as on the deployment of prisoners of war, Jews and persons of other nationalities who were forced into service. Different types of records of different provenance document the recruitment campaigns and procedures applied by the Nazis, the working and living conditions of forced labourers and their families left behind, examine how the system of forced labour was organized by the Nazis, and deal with numerous other related questions. The wide variety of archival holdings ranges from files from the local and regional self-government or occupying administrations to photo, film and poster collections.

Entries into the online list of archival holdings are made by the participating archives themselves. This requires merely a standard browser to access the Internet. Through an input screen entries can be uploaded directly to an online database. Thus, information can be made instantly available on the Internet. The Federal Archives do not charge any fees for documenting, maintaining and presenting the data or for operating the Information Hub. To register with the Information Hub, archives and similar entities will need a user name and password which will be sent to them by the Federal Archives upon request.

The following is a list of core data requested:

1. an overview of the relevant holdings including information on the type of records (e.g. current records) and a summary of their main contents,
and
2. a list of the relevant record groups; further in-depth information on the indexing methods used may be added.

All archives, memorial institutions, museums and similar entities possessing material related to forced labour under the German Nazi regime are invited to participate in and contribute to the Information Hub.
